Lossit

Retro complements to contemporary design

Product Description

The move to make the contemporary workplace a more diverse, comfortable, relaxing and different environment continues apace, and is only likely to grow in line with the expectations and preferences of the growing number of millennials in the workforce.

The new workplace increasingly sees contemporary design being complemented and counterpointed by mid-century modern, vintage, '70s retro-inspired designs and industrial chic (with an eclectic mix of natural and industrial materials). The search for a made-by-hand (rather than by committee) aesthetic sees raw metals, roughly finished woods, synthetic leathers and vinyls appearing alongside intense pop patterns, hand-dyed corduroys and lush velvets.

Like the established and successful Peeps sofas, the design personality and finishes offered by both Lossit and Lismore knowingly reference this demand for a more retro, eclectic look and feel. Both Lossit and Lismore are designed to look equally good in synthetic leathers, lush velvets or intense patterns.

Lossit has an angular metal frame that supports both the seat and back, with a solid timber shelf running the length of the back to either support objects or perch on. The frame and shelf are available in our extensive range of standard finishes for metals and woods respectively.
